Under the Financial Services Commission Act, 2010 -21, all financial institutions are required to comply with certain regulatory requirements. This section sets out the guidelines for submission of bottom-up stress tests in relation to natural disasters for all Class 2 insurance companies writing third party business to the Barbadian public.

Introduction

Stress testing is a risk management tool used to estimate plausible, but not impossible, adverse impacts of a set of specified changes in risk factors on the financial position of an entity. In recent years, stress tests have become more popular, as the International Monetary Fund (IMF) has identified them as key tools for assessing resilience and identifying factors that may undermine financial stability. At the regulatory level, stress tests form part of the macro-prudential tool kit and are key in assessing financial vulnerabilities, which may trigger systemic events. Stress tests are also a vital part of financial risk management for entities and continue to emerge as a fundamental tool for supervisors to identify risks and vulnerabilities in the financial system.

As the severity and frequency of weather events continue to increase, there is increasing evidence to support the impacts of these events on financial systems, as well as their potential to undermine financial stability. Extreme weather events usually result in the damage of physical assets, loss of life, productivity declines, property and casualty losses, and increased probability of defaults.

Scope and Application

This framework applies to Class 2 insurance companies registered to conduct insurance business in Barbados, writing third party business to the Barbados public.

Purpose of Stress Testing

Stress testing must be part of the overall risk management programme of insurance companies. More specifically, it should be one of the pillars of the own risk and solvency assessments conducted internally by insurance companies for target setting.

An institution's stress testing programme should be a forward-looking tool used to assess the resilience of the institution under adverse, but plausible conditions. As a result, this tool should be widely incorporated in the risk management programme as it is capable of highlighting vulnerabilities, aids in determining the risk appetite and exposure limits, and provides quantitative evidence to support these and other decision making processes.

As it relates to climate risks, an institution's stress testing programme should serve the following purposes:

- Risk identification

The stress test for natural disasters should highlight the vulnerabilities in the insurer's portfolio as it should consider concentrations and interactions, among various other elements.

- Capital and Liquidity management

These tests should be forward looking and able to identify the impact of natural disasters on the capital and liquidity position of the company. These tests provide useful inputs into internal capital adequacy models used by the institutions.

Role of the Board and Senior Management

As the stress test form part of an overarching risk management programme, the Board must have responsibility for the stress testing programme and be informed of the key findings. It must also hold Senior Management accountable for the programme's implementations, oversight, timely reporting of findings and plans to deal with emerging threats. Stress testing can support the decision making process and Senior Management should implement policies that require the use of this tool.

Methodology

Event Definition

For the purpose of these simulations, natural disasters may be defined as hurricanes, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, tsunamis and floods. Each entity is required to conduct three broad scenarios under the themes "General Parameters", "Institution Specific Tests" and "Specific Event Test". These tests are further outlined below.

Assumptions

The development of natural catastrophe scenarios are generally supported by certain qualitative risk assessments of past catastrophes. While these may be singular events, insurers must consider the associated events triggered by these disasters and incorporate such into their models.

The scenario test should incorporate simultaneous moves in a number of risk factors, usually related to those experienced in the aftermath of a natural disaster. Each entity is required to outline the assumptions used to further explain the results of the shocks.

Scenario I – General Parameters

The first scenario is a general test on key parameters. It is prescriptive in nature and provides information on an entity's ability to withstand shocks of a specific magnitude on certain parameters. Table 1 outlines the parameters for five (5) tests, which are not expected to be conducted simultaneously.

Table 1. General Parameters

General Parameters
• Increase in gross claims - o Property - o Motor vehicle - o Personal accident, health, accident & sickness - o Ordinary life, industrial life, credit life, group life	+100% +100% +200% +150%
• General strengthening of technical provisions	+3%
• Default by related parties [losses on: Equity Investments in Subsidiaries and Affiliates; Due from Subsidiaries and Affiliates]	-40%/ -40%
• Increase in expenses [operating and other expenses, but not acquisition expenses or reinsurance commissions]	+10%
• Impacts of Economic Downturn	+10%

Scenario II – Institution Specific Natural Disaster Tests

The FSC is mindful that entities have different exposures across different jurisdictions. Under Scenario II each entity is required to undertake the relevant natural disaster stress tests that it believes is relevant, as a normal part of its business. Each test undertaken in this scenario must be identified. In addition, assumptions and parameter adjustments must be clearly explained.

Scenario III – Specific Event

The event for consideration is a Category 5 hurricane.

Results for All Tests

The results of the test should clearly outline:

1. the baseline position followed by post shock results on the
 - a. the balance sheet
 - b. the income statement
2. the methodology, assumptions and the full range of variables used for each tests
3. areas of regulatory breach
4. (for insurers providing coverage outside of Barbados) identification and description of those exposures
5. perceived impacts on reinsurance arrangements

NB: See Appendix for reporting template to ensure consistency in the reporting criteria.

Valuation of Insurance Liabilities

All insurers are required to have their insurance liabilities valued by actuaries. It is imperative that detailed actuarial notes supporting the valuations are also provided.

Supervisory Considerations

Reporting Requirements

In considering the financial stability challenges due to climate change, the FSC is requiring each entity to conduct stress testing related to climate change and other natural disasters on the operations of the company. Each entity is required to submit to the FSC, the results of its stress tests, on an annual basis. The results should be submitted on, or before, December 31 of each year, commencing 2021.

Data

The data to be used in the stress tests should at least be as at March 31 of each reporting period. For example, the reporting period for 2021 is December 31; as a result the data used in the simulation should, at a minimum, be as at March 31, 2021.

The results for the simulation should be forward looking and estimated annually for up to two (2) years. For example, the submitted report should outline the baseline and stressed scenarios for 2022, 2023 and 2024.

Invitation for discussions

Following the submission of the stress testing results, entities will be invited to make presentations to Senior Officials of the FSC on the outcomes of the simulations. A key component of the discussions will be the capacity of each entity to support the risks being undertaken by the insurer.

Specific reference would be made to the existing capital and solvency frameworks as outlined in the Insurance Act. Where there is a breach or a specific vulnerability, discussions on resolutions and the way forward will be undertaken.
